*Inclusive and Resilient Development:
An Urgent Call to Action*

ABOUT THE NORBULING RIGTER COLLEGE (NRC):

NRC is one of the only two private higher education institutions in Bhutan, committed to empowering young minds through quality, accessible, and student-centred education. Located in the scenic Paro Valley and affiliated with the Royal University of Bhutan (RUB), NRC strives to develop enlightened, locally grounded, globally competent, adaptable, and future-ready graduates who can contribute meaningfully to society.

Established with the vision of advancing education while remaining rooted in Bhutanese values, NRC integrates academic excellence, innovation, research, and holistic development within a supportive learning environment. The College offers RUB benchmarked and industry-relevant programmes that combine rigorous academic learning with practical experience, critical inquiry, leadership development, and community engagement.

NRC places strong emphasis on research, innovation, and collaborative partnerships, fostering an academic culture that encourages creativity, lifelong learning, and responsible citizenship. Through national and international collaborations, the College seeks to enrich learning opportunities, enhance employability, promote knowledge exchange, and address emerging local and global challenges.

The institutional culture of NRC is guided by its INSPIRE core values—Integrity, Networking, Service, Professionalism, Innovation, Responsibility, and Excellence—which shape all aspects of academic and campus life. These values, grounded in the Bhutanese principles of Tha Dam-Tshig and Ley Judrey, nurture ethical leadership, accountability, collaboration, and social responsibility among students and staff alike.

Recognised for its commitment to quality and continuous improvement, NRC has been awarded Grade “A” Accreditation by the Bhutan Quality and Professional Certification Authority (BQPCA), Ministry of Education and Skills Development, Royal Government of Bhutan. Today, the College stands as a dynamic centre of learning, research, and innovation, dedicated to preparing competent, innovative, and responsible global citizens for an increasingly interconnected world.

ABOUT THE SOCIETY FOR PATHWAYS TO SUSTAINABILITY

The Society for Pathways to Sustainability (PathS), established on March 29, 2022, is a charitable and social welfare organization dedicated to advancing sustainable development through interdisciplinary research, academic collaboration, and policy advocacy. PathS’ core mission is to translate empirical findings into actionable strategies that significantly enhance the well-being of individuals and global communities.

The Society’s membership base is diverse, comprising over 240 members—including researchers, academicians, and policymakers—who represent crucial fields such as economics, environment, social sciences, political science, law, education, commerce and management etc. PathS focuses on key areas including the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), gender equality, environmental management, financial and social inclusion, regional development, and public policy planning. The organization addresses complex sustainability challenges by organizing impactful conferences to foster dialogue. Notable past events include:

Introduction and Rationale

As humanity navigates the complexities of the 21st century, we stand at a precarious juncture. The dominant development paradigms of the last century, driven largely by industrial expansion and GDP-centric metrics, have achieved unprecedented material wealth for a fraction of the global population. However, this progress has come at a devastating cost. We are currently witnessing a polycrisis: the accelerating destabilization of the Earth's climate systems, the rapid erosion of biodiversity, and deepening social inequalities. The planetary boundaries that regulate the stability of the Earth system are being breached, threatening the very life support systems upon which our economies and societies depend.

In this context, global sustainability efforts are often hindered by institutional and sectoral silos. Policymakers, scientists, and business leaders frequently operate in isolation, treating environmental protection, economic growth, and social equity as competing objectives rather than complementary facets of a unified whole. Economic policies often externalize environmental costs, while conservation strategies are frequently designed without adequate consideration for social equity or economic viability. This fragmentation has led to a disconnect between scientific consensus and political action, creating a gap between knowledge and implementation that we must urgently bridge.

The theme of this conference, "Harmonizing Nature, Economy, and Society: Pathways for Inclusive and Resilient Development," is a direct response to this fragmentation. It seeks to dismantle these silos by fostering a transdisciplinary dialogue that recognizes the intricate interdependence of our world. The concept of "harmonization" goes beyond mere balance; it implies a synergistic integration where the health of the biosphere supports economic vitality, and economic activities actively regenerate social and natural capital. It is a move from an extractive paradigm to a regenerative one, where development is not just about sustaining the status quo, but about fostering resilience—the capacity of communities and ecosystems to absorb shocks, adapt, and transform in the face of adversity.

Bhutan: A Living Laboratory for Sustainability

Hosting this conference in the Kingdom of Bhutan offers a profound symbolic and practical advantage. Bhutan is not merely a venue; it is a "living laboratory" for the very principles this conference seeks to promote. Nestled in the fragile Eastern Himalayas, Bhutan has long rejected the notion that economic growth must come at the expense of environmental degradation. Instead, the country has championed the philosophy of Gross National Happiness (GNH).

GNH is not a superficial metric of well-being; it is a sophisticated development philosophy that explicitly prioritizes sustainable socio-economic development, environmental conservation, preservation and promotion of culture, and good governance. As the world's only carbon-negative country, Bhutan absorbs more carbon dioxide than it emits, thanks largely to its constitutional mandate to maintain at least 60% of its land under forest cover in perpetuity. By choosing Bhutan as the host, we ground our academic discourse in a real-world example where the harmonization of nature, economy, and society is not a theoretical aspiration but a practiced reality.

Partnership and Transdisciplinary Action

The partnership between the Norbuling Rigter College (NRC) affiliated with the Royal University of Bhutan (RUB) and the Society for Pathways to Sustainability (PathS) further amplifies the conference's scope. While NRC provides the grounding in traditional wisdom and environmental stewardship, PathS brings expertise in complex systems, sustainability transitions, and policy advocacy.

This collaboration creates a bridge between the Global South and the wider academic community, facilitating a two-way exchange of knowledge. It acknowledges that solutions to global challenges require both the high-tech innovations of modern science and the time-tested, low-carbon wisdom of indigenous and traditional knowledge systems.

Objectives and the Path Forward

The PathS and the NRC propose this landmark international conference, scheduled for October 6–8, 2026, to address the critical imperative of our time: rebalancing the relationship between human progress and planetary boundaries.

Our objectives are fourfold:

- Synthesis of Knowledge: We aim to integrate insights from ecological economics, sociology, environmental science, literature, and technology to define "harmonized" development pathways. By breaking down the barriers between the "hard" and "soft" sciences, we seek a holistic understanding of sustainability.
- Policy Discourse: We will examine how nations can transition from GDP-centric models to "well-being economies." This involves discussing policy instruments, governance structures, and fiscal frameworks that prioritize inclusivity and long-term resilience over short-term gains.
- Resilience Building: We seek to identify specific strategies for vulnerable ecosystems and communities to adapt to the dual threats of climate change and economic volatility. This is particularly urgent for mountainous regions and small island developing states that are on the frontlines of the climate crisis.
- Youth and Future Leaders: Recognizing that the future belongs to the next generation, we are dedicated to engaging students and early-career researchers. We aim to empower them to design resilient futures, ensuring that the transition to sustainability is intergenerational and just.

Ultimately, "Harmonizing Nature, Economy, and Society" is more than just a conference theme; it is a blueprint for survival and flourishing in the Anthropocene. We invite global researchers, policymakers, practitioners, and thinkers to join us in Bhutan to explore actionable pathways for development that are socially inclusive, economically viable, and ecologically resilient. The conference deliberations will culminate in a collection of research papers designed to significantly benefit policymakers, corporate leaders, and academicians, ensuring that the dialogue held in the mountains of Bhutan resonates across the globe. Together, we can move beyond the rhetoric of sustainability and take concrete steps toward a world where nature and humanity thrive in concert.

The conference deliberations will culminate in a collection of research papers to significantly benefit policymakers, corporate leaders, and academicians. The conference invites original research papers on all aspects of sustainable development, governance, policy, and the circular economy. The consolidated tracks and sub-themes are as follows:

Thematic Tracks

The conference will be organized into 7 tracks, aligning with the main theme:

Track 1: Nature and Planetary Stewardship

- Biodiversity Conservation: Protecting ecosystem services and natural habitats.
- Climate Adaptation: Strategies for resilience in fragile mountain ecosystems.
- Regenerative Agriculture: Advancing sustainable resource management and soil health.
- Carbon-Negative Case Studies: Practical models for maintaining a net-zero or negative footprint.

Track 2: Economy Beyond Growth

- GNH Metrics: Utilizing Gross National Happiness as a primary development indicator.
- Circular Economy: Promoting green entrepreneurship and waste-to-resource systems.
- Sustainable Finance: Funding inclusive growth and long-term development projects.
- Economic Decoupling: Separating financial well-being from environmental degradation

Track 3: Society, Equity, and Inclusion

- Social Resilience: Strengthening community-based adaptation and local support.
- Indigenous Governance: Integrating traditional knowledge into sustainability policy.
- Empowerment in Transition: Ensuring gender equality and youth leadership in green shifts.
- Sustainable Urbanization: Balancing modern health and well-being with city growth

Track 4: Transdisciplinary Pathways

- Knowledge Integration: Blending science, policy-making, and traditional wisdom.
- Educational Reform: Restructuring curricula to prioritize sustainability literacy.
- Systems Thinking: Using complex modeling to build resilient future scenarios.
- Holistic Frameworks: Bridging the gap between specialized academic silos.

Track 5: Literature, Culture, and Ecological Humanities

- Arts and Language: Analyzing how creative expression shapes environmental views.
- Cultural Preservation: Safeguarding ecological knowledge through folklore and tradition.
- Spiritual Stewardship: Exploring ethics and spirituality in environmental care.
- Media Representations: Examining nature and sustainability in cinema and digital media

Track 6: Technology, Innovation, and Smart Solutions

- Green Tech: Innovating renewable energy and efficient infrastructure solutions.
- Smart Cities: Leveraging AI and ICT for optimized urban living and resource use.
- Telemedicine: Delivering high-quality healthcare to remote and underserved areas.
- The Digital Divide: Bridging the connectivity gap between urban and rural populations.

Track 7: Governance, Law, and Behavioral Sciences

- Legal Frameworks: Establishing justice for biodiversity and environmental protection.
- Behavioral Habits: Addressing cognitive barriers to encourage sustainable living.
- Resource Power Dynamics: Analyzing the distribution of power in resource conflicts.
- Effective Governance: Implementing strategic leadership for national development.
